The brief: to capture the moment of the Buddha's enlightenment and the dharma spreading out across the world.

My interpretation: Prabashvara - the term for the Buddha's aura at enlightenment

In the painting, you have the five colours, emanating from the Buddha and as portrayed in Buddhist prayer flags.

I've used orange as the predominant colour for the bottom half as orange signifies Theravada robes in my mind, and it's where Satipanya is rooted.

At the heart of the painting are all the colours of the Buddha's aura fluttering like prayer flags.

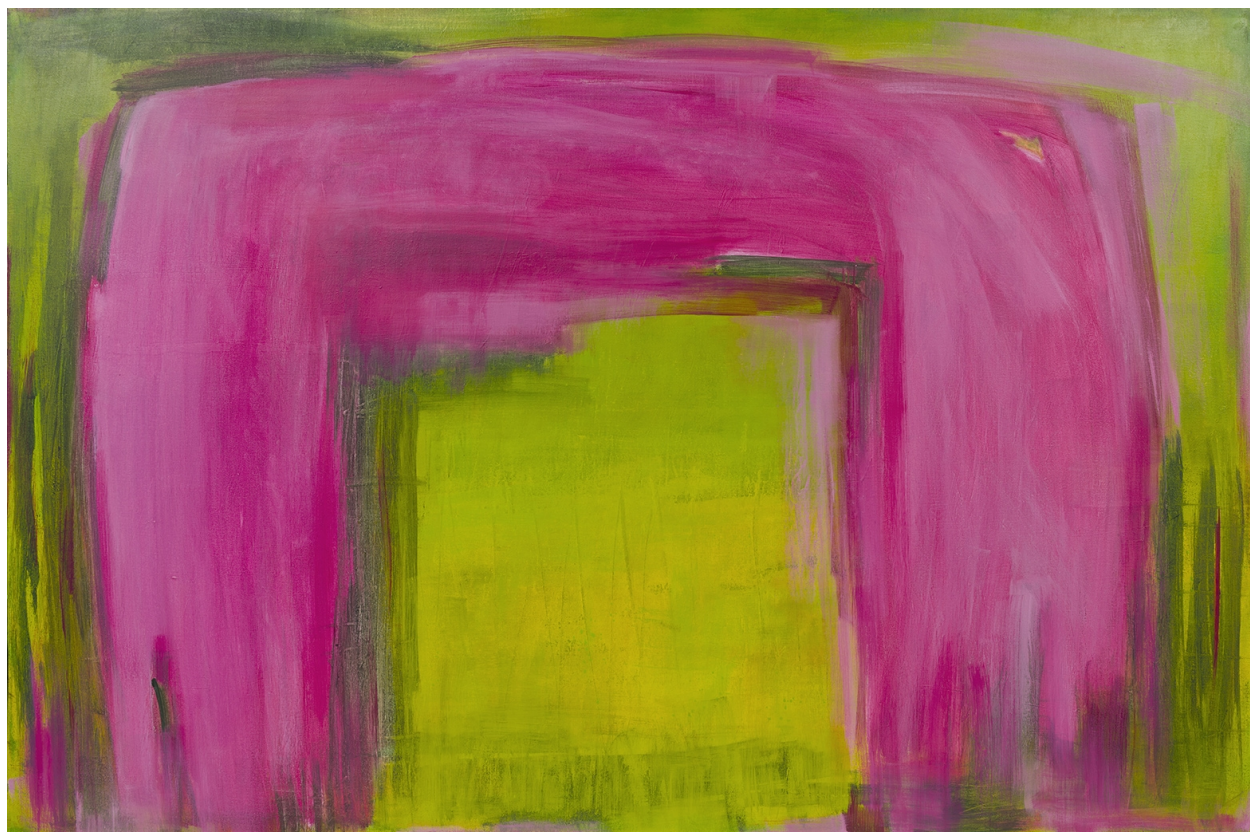

The top section is the mix of all the colours together to represent Prabashvara. The mix signifies the Dhamma spreading around the world.
